

Enchantments

From one of Italys brightest young novelists and award-winning screenwriters, a charming, offbeat, and original story, told through the direct and unfiltered eyes of a young girl, as she comes of age and ultimately confronts and weathers a tragic loss. Written as a memoir and told in twenty-five short chapters, Enchantments reveals a young Italian girl living in Paris with her parents and siblings. For the most part it is a happy liferefreshingly joyful, in factand full of the things that children of her particular world and time do. She chooses new outfits for her doll, buys horses with her father, takes a ship to the States to visit her mothers family, eats ice cream at midnight, plays with the local children on visits to her fathers farm. There are the regular trials and tribulations of a childs life: being tickle-tortured by her brother, betraying her younger sister, envying a classmate. All the while the darkening adult world around her is only implied, though we deduce the role her father plays in her life, and as we slowly see the young girl growing up, realizing her powers, the novel moves toward its deeply affecting finale. In Linda Ferri we have a new writer of exceptional talent.
