

The Ultimate Betrayal

In 1950s London, Frederick Wardson, alias the Fox, is a loner when it comes to his criminal activities. He has learnt through the hard school of life who to trust - and that is only himself. He has revenge in store for those who crossed him previously and killed Norah, a woman of his equal whom he dearly loved, and this necessitates his involvement with the IRA, resulting in sinister implications. Frederick Wardson's survival depends on sheer cunning and guts. His travels take him to the West Country and Ireland, with his ruthless crimes and shady deals providing an insider's insight into police corruption and terrorist organisation. Sometimes a brutal book, The Ultimate Betrayal is packed with intrigue and deception. Jack Jackson takes the reader back to gangland London and into the mind of the toughest of villains. However, even within this formidable setting, the villains have a code of their own and deal harshly with those who step outside this unwritten boundary.
